

NEW BAHÁ'Í TEACHER LEADERS

The U. S. Baha'i Community appointed five new members to its National Teaching Committee which directs the teaching of the Baha'i Faith in the U. S. Four of the members here are (from left) William W. Allison, Atlanta, an official with the Atlanta-Fulton County Economic Opportunity Authority; Mrs. Lois Goebel, Winnetka, Ill., Head of National Baha'i Department of Community Development; Miss Magdalene Carney, Nashville, Tenn., a school teacher; and Albert J. Porter, Little Rock, Ark., business manager, Philander-Smith College. Not shown is Paul Young, Tulsa, Okla., an official with the Tulsa Urban League. The Baha'i Faith is the youngest of the world's religions and has its national center in Wilmette, Ill.
