

Urban League chief to speak

Whitney M. Young Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, will be the principal speaker at the International Education Year Awards Luncheon, Oct. 17, at the Statler-Hilton hotel in New York City.

The Children's Television Workshop of New York City, for its production of the television series "Sesame Street" and its other efforts on behalf of education, will receive the 1970 Louis G. Gregory Award for Service to Humanity.

The award will be given to Dr. James L. Olivero, executive director of the Southwestern Cooperative Educational Laboratory, Albuquerque, N. M., for his achievements in education, and in particular for furthering the educational opportunities for minority groups.

The luncheon and the award are sponsored by the North American Baha'i Office for Human Rights (NABOHR), an agency of the U. S. Baha'i Community with headquarters in Wilmette.

Named in honor of a black American who served on the first U. S. National Baha'i administrative body, and who was named a leader in human rights efforts during the early years of this century, the Louis G. Gregory Award was established in 1968 by the U. S. Baha'i National Assembly.

Former recipients of this award are the Xerox Corp. for the sponsorship of the television programs on the United Nations, and "Of Black America," and Clark M. Eichelberger, chairman of the Commission to Study the Organization for Peace, for his work in the furtherance of human rights.
